On March 11, the monthly SCHS webinar will be presented by David Brenner, a leader in designing world-class living wall systems. He will emphasize critical factors in designing living walls, an overview of different systems for small to large installations, and the benefits of plant life in work and living spaces. He is known for bringing a deep expertise and artistic intent to enhance the sensory and environmental impact of each architectural and interior design project. His commissions range from projects for Fortune 100 companies to architectural projects of international renown and he will be sharing a selection of these during his program.

Brenner holds a degree in Environmental Horticulture Sciences from California Polytechnic University at San Luis Obispo and studied at the Royal Botanic Gardens, Kew in London. He is also the founding principal and lead designer at the vertical landscaping firm Habitat Horticulture, where his expertise with growing mediums and plant species interaction led to the development of proprietary and durable techniques that established the company as a force in vertical garden design. Brenner sees his work as an integral part of a public shift in consciousness towards the restorative effect of plants on health and well-being. It is his belief that designing living walls affords the chance to promote awareness of native and endangered plant species and to have a direct impact on quality of life.

As a dedicated collaborator on corporate, residential, commercial, and public spaces of any size, Brenner frequently speaks on the benefit of living walls in urban architecture. His work has been featured in publications including Wall Street Journal, Dwell, Architectural Digest, Wired, Work Design Magazine, and San Francisco Magazine. He was also honored by The San Francisco Business Times as one of their 2019 “Top 40 Under 40” class.

The topic of living walls and vertical landscaping is an intriguing and fresh topic for the horticultural society, and we anticipate the opportunity to learn more about it from this renowned expert. You can join us for this unique program by registering at: www.socalhort.org.
On February 11, the SCHS proudly presented its inaugural program in the newly-established Ruth Borun Lecture Series (a special annual presentation to augment our usual monthly programs) with speaker Jennifer Jewell, host of the weekly public radio program and podcast Cultivating Place. She focused her presentation on her philosophy — that gardeners and gardens are powerful agents and spaces for potentially positive change in our world. She showcased individuals who are manifesting change through horticulture in diverse ways, and also improving health and well-being. While Jewell never met Ruth Borun, she did cite her as just such an individual who exemplified these ideals in the building and ongoing evolution of her own garden.

Jewell began her presentation by positing that common ground between people transcends differences and can create a mind set shift through behavioral changes. It is her belief that individual gardeners and their choices can have an impact on our communities and the larger world through a “culture of care.” To illustrate this philosophy of empowerment through gardening, she wrote about 75 women doing important plant-based work in her book The Earth in Her Hands. Through their experiential diversity, combined with values, priorities and leadership, these people are influencing others to have a meaningful impact on communities world-wide.

With occupations ranging from botanists to plantspeople, agriculture to floriculture, landscape designers to horticultural writers, herbalists, public policy makers and more, Jewell chose to present the work of a small, diverse group of people who are producing this ripple effect. They included: Leah Penniman of Soul Fire Farm (est. 2010), whose mission is to uproot racism in the food system by training the next generation of activist-farmers and strengthening the movements for food sovereignty and community self-determination; Dr. Elaine Ingham, of Soil Food Web, working since the 1980s on improving soil health worldwide through encouraging cultural practices that support microbial ecosystems and de-emphasize the use of chemicals; Erin Benzakein of Floret Flowers, whose organic flower farm (est. 2008) has been a template for the growth of small to medium-sized U.S.-based organic floriculturists as local economic and environmental drivers; and professor Dr. Robin Wall Kimermer of SUNY college, the author of Braiding Sweetgrass, which focuses on the intersection of scientific and indigenous botany, and how a combination of these horticultural practices help support a healthy relationship between people and plants.

In addition to these leaders in the promotion of individual and communal health and well-being through plant-based work and education, Jewell also provided a brief look at a few innovative place-based gardens from her upcoming book, Under Western Skies. Photographed by Caitlin Atkinson, these gardens represent places that blur the lines between cultivated and wild — living spaces which are aesthetically pleasing while also being connected to their natural environment. She feels that the best gardens — like that of Ruth Borun — are a culmination of the natural history of a place, its cultural context, and the personal life of the gardener. Examples included: the 20-year-old garden of Jim Martinez and Jim Fissel in Marfa, Texas that features 90+ native species while also incorporating views of the natural grasslands abutting the property; the home garden of landscape architect David Godshall in Los Angeles, where he occasionally allows naturalized species to take hold, creating nuances and unplanned surprises amidst his designed spaces; the 3.5-acre Nature Gardens at the Natural History Museum of L.A. County, designed in 2013 to provide a nature-inspired wildlife habitat for the public by Mia Lehrer, and nurtured under the directorship of horticulturist Carol Bornstein (recently retired); the wildlife-friendly native garden created by artist Sheila Ford Richmond in Hood River, Oregon, who then rallied others to assist in converting a local space into a habitat garden benefitting the greater community; and the Thomas the Apostle Center, a retreat in Wyoming that has been restored by caretaker Jay Moody from a property comprised of lawns and flower borders into a wild refuge that blends into the surrounding natural landscape.

Jewell concluded her presentation by stating that “Our gardens are more than just spaces. They are moral, social, physical and political documents... compasses for us in what they say and don’t say.” We believe Ruth Borun’s love of gardening, which through her family has allowed the SCHS to establish this lecture series, speaks clearly to Ruth’s legacy. We know the family was watching this evening and hope they feel Ruth would have enjoyed this presentation as much as we did.

We look forward to what the future of the Ruth Borun Lecture Series will share.

SCHS BOARD SEEKING NOMINATIONS FOR 2021 HOTY HONOREES

The SCHS board is currently beginning preparations for our annual Horticulturist of the Year Award ceremonies, to be held in September. While we do not yet know if this year’s event will be virtual or live, at this time we are actively discussing potential honorees, and would like to solicit any nominations that members would like to put forth.

In 2020, for the first time since the HOTY award was first presented over 50 years ago, the ceremony was held online and three recipients were honored posthumously. This year, we may again present more than one award, and therefore any and all suggestions from members would be greatly appreciated. You may nominate one or more living or deceased candidates, as we know our membership has diverse ties to the wide horticultural community throughout Southern California and many worthy individuals have not yet been honored by the SCHS.

Please think about whom you would like to see honored as a HOTY, and contact the board through our website.

Click to link to our “Contact” page here.

Thank you for participating.

We are excited to see your nominees!
